

Deadline for second wellness activity extended

To those who want to keep paying the discounted insurance rate, your deadline for the second required wellness activity has been postponed to April 30, 2010.

What does this mean? Rather than requiring you to complete two wellness activities by Dec. 31, 2009, you must complete one now and one later.

Here are the details:

1) Between now and Dec. 31, 2009, you must complete just one wellness activity (not two!). You have a choice:

- an Aetna online "Healthy Living Program," or
- the SPC Fall Wellness 2009 Challenge (starts in October; details coming soon)

Offering his input

Angelo Rivera, Supervisor, SPC Custodial and Landscaping Services, was one of 27 invited speakers Monday night for the Public Forum to help the Board of Trustees establish the criteria for what it wants in a new president.

The board will meet again in a few weeks to discuss what is needed in a new president. The Presidential Search Web site has more details from the Public Forum, including an image gallery.

Easy rider – Clearwater instructor commutes by bike

The benefit of Greg Byrd's seven-mile round trip to work is that he can travel at a leisurely pace, taking in the pleasant view around him. The drawback: a rainy day can make his arrival at work a bit soggy than for other commuters.

That's because he rides his bike.

"Biking to work for me is a great alternative to exercising in other ways; I've always disliked exercising for its own sake," said Byrd, Clearwater Campus Communications instructor. "I feel rather like a kid who gets to go outside and ride his bike twice a day rather than someone who has to drive to work."

Byrd began commuting by bike 20 years ago, riding to work atop a Raleigh 10-speed. At that time, the college owned a field house across the street from the Clearwater Campus, where he could shower before work. Once the field house was sold, he stopped biking to work.

2) Then between Jan. 1 and April 30, 2010, you must complete:

- an Aetna online “Healthy Living Program,” or
- the SPC Spring 2010 Wellness Challenge

In summary

If you’ve already completed one wellness activity, you can take a break and wait until after the new year to start your next one.

If you’re already underway with your second requirement, you’re ahead and now have until April 30 to complete it.

To those who have finished both already: Bravo! You beat the deadline and are done for the year.

A refresher about Aetna’s confidential online “Healthy Living Program”

- 1) Log into the Aetna Web site, just as you did to complete your confidential Health Risk Assessment. It’s at www.aetna.com.
- 2) Click on Simple Steps to a Healthier Life.
- 3) Click on the View My Health Media Programs box.
- 4) Get started on one of following six Healthy Living Programs:

Depression	Helps you claim a peaceful, happy, energetic outlook on life.
Insomnia	Learn how to improve the quality of your sleep without medications.
Relax	Develops an individualized plan so you can effectively deal with life’s daily challenges.
Balance	Makes small, smart gradual changes tailored to your lifestyle for lasting results.
Nourish	A personalized program that shows how small changes to your everyday food choices make a big difference.
Breathe	A smoker’s guide to identifying strategies specific to you to reduce cravings, resist relapse, and feel healthier.

Once you have chosen a program:

- Complete the first 30 days of your selected program.
- At the end of 30 days, complete the evaluation questionnaire that you will receive via e-mail.
- Aetna will send Human Resources notice that you have completed an unspecified program (meaning HR will NOT know what program you completed; just that you have completed one).

Again, thank you for your feedback. If you have any questions, please contact Steven Malla, SPC Wellness Coordinator, at 727-341-3083.

Now that the campus has the LEED-certified Natural Science, Mathematics, and College of Education Building, featuring two showers for bike riders, Byrd started his bike commute again this past winter.

He initially rode a big blue Schwinn five-speed beach cruiser with a luggage rack and huge wheels, pedaling along well-traveled Drew Street. This summer, he switched to a Trek hybrid bike (a cross between a mountain bike and a road bike) that he bought for $50.

"People have been surprisingly nice and cooperative on the road," Byrd said. "Mostly, people don't pay attention so you have to look out for them."

He says that riding his bike rather than driving his truck saves him about a gallon of gas or more a week. So far, the only problem Byrd has had with his bike commute came in the form of a nail that flattened his tire. However, after switching out the tube, he was back on the road within 10 minutes

Otherwise, "it's been perfect," said Byrd. "I've been commuting three to four days a week during the summer term and throughout this term."

Byrd offers a few tips for others who might consider biking to work:

Find a bike that fits you – "The better the bike works and the better it fits you, the more you will enjoy the ride," Byrd said. "But don't feel you need to spend a bunch of money on a bike. I didn't."

Wear the proper attire – "I do own some of those tight, shiny bike shorts but I wear them under my cargo shorts," Byrd said. "I definitely have a helmet and wear either a safety green shirt or a bright orange when I'm riding. There's no need to become a 'gear nut,' though. Get on the bike and ride."

Ride at a pace that is comfortable to you – "Don't feel you have to be Lance Armstrong," Byrd said. "All the biking gurus say that you should keep up a pretty brisk cadence so that you're not putting stress on those knees."

Take the proper route – "The route you take to work in a car may not be the best bike route to take," Byrd said. "It's sometimes helpful to take a weekend day to ride the route and find out what works best on two wheels. You might find some really nice neighborhoods, parks or streets to take that are not much further than the big roads."

Don't ride on the sidewalk – "Serious bike commuters and riders emphasize that it's actually safer to ride with traffic on the street than on a sidewalk. This seems to be more and more true, as cars don't look for you on the sidewalk but they see you when you're in your part of the lane on the street."

Coming soon: SPC's new commercials

SPC is rolling out a new series of commercials featuring its students that will air through local cable systems and in area movie theaters.

The first spot will begin running Oct. 2 during previews for movies at Regal Park Place Stadium 16 theater in Pinellas Park and at the AMC Woodlands Square 20 theater in Oldsmar. This spot and the others in the series also will air on cable systems including Bright House, Knology and Verizon, as well as local TV stations WMOR and WTOG, in November. The spots are a continuation of the student profile campaign that the college has run for the past year and a half.

In the last phase of the campaign, the college's commercial spots featured close up, black-and-white shots of students giving reasons for enrolling at SPC. In this new phase, the commercials are filmed in color, with students sharing their personal stories as to why they chose SPC.

The students featured in the spots were selected from those who auditioned for the college's marketing campaign in January, and each spot was shot by SPC Videographer Jeremy Peplow.

"These students were chosen to represent the diversity of interests at SPC," said Mary Hearn, Marketing Coordinator, Institutional Advancement.

In the first spot, a student explains how he turned to SPC after his plans to study medicine at an Ivy League college were derailed. He goes on to say how the college's nursing program still enabled him to turn his dream of helping others into a reality.

Clockwise, from bottom. SPC Videographer Jeremy Peplow poses with Anna Faiola, Video Support Specialist, SPC Nursing graduate John-Pierre Quimbo, and Production Assistant Ian Corry during the filming of one of the college's new commercial spots.

"The best stories come directly from the students themselves, so that's the source we use," said Bill Frederick, Information Coordinator, Institutional Advancement, who wrote the scripts for the commercials. "It usually doesn't take too long for the students to reveal the most interesting facts about themselves, and those are the facts we use to build the stories."

To view the commercials online, visit the college's You Tube page.

New faculty graduation attendance policy

Faculty members who are required to participate in May graduations soon will be able to decide which graduation to attend.

Effective this fall, faculty members will be able to sign up for December graduations as an alternative to May ceremonies. Summer graduations will become a faculty option next year.

SPC President Carl M. Kuttler Jr. agreed to the new policy, which will allow faculty members to celebrate with students in their particular programs. Also, it will allow flexibility for those who have commitments during the break between spring and summer terms.

The new policy also will include faculty processions in full regalia at all SPC graduations.

The Faculty Senate President will send out a college wide e-mail that will contain links to slots reserved for full-time faculty members. This year, the e-mail will be sent in the fall term for the December graduation. Sign-ups will be filled on a first-come-first-served basis.

Those who do not secure slots for the July or December graduations will be required to participate in the following May graduation. Attendance will be monitored; anyone who signs up for one of the earlier slots but who does not participate will be required to march in the May ceremony.

Onward & Upward

Jean Wortock, Dean of the SPC College of Nursing, along with College of Nursing professors Mary Tittle and Betty Wajdowicz, were recipients of the Great 100 Awards during the Florida Nurses Association's Centennial Convention Thursday at St. Pete Beach.

The essence of balance

Balance is the key to everything. Without it, your life would feel like a seesaw – up and down, up and down until you get off and fall down.

Life does not have to be that way; you have choices to make.

Our mental, physical and social wellness need to be balanced. One form of wellness can play off of another, contributing to the success of them all. It is one key to lifestyle stability.

Physicality is immeasurably linked to mentality. A person's mentality is determined by his willpower, goals, and attitude. Creating challenges for yourself to pursue will allow you to overcome them.

Another aspect of wellness is socializing. You come to work everyday with others, and it takes a lot of social skills to advance in your career. Your mentality toward your job, co-workers, and yourself always will affect your ability to interact. Socializing should have limits, but a positive outlook has no boundaries.

Your physicality in a social setting can give cues to who you are. These cues can dictate other's opinions and reactions toward you. The way you present yourself can go a long way toward positive experiences with others. It does not matter if you are the most attractive or best dressed, but rather how you make others feel. Engage others with the same passion you engage in yourself and optimism soon will follow.

Mental, physical, and social wellnesses are all vital personal tools; use them to build a better today and tomorrow. The finished product will be one of value and substance that will keep you from falling off the "seesaw."

Balance yourself through personal wellness by participating in the Fall 2009 Wellness Challenge beginning Oct. 12. More information will follow in next week's Blue & White.

Local businesses and individuals volunteer with High Point Elementary School to develop garden

St. Petersburg College Sustainability Club members, Dynamet, Inc. and Gateway Organic Farm have partnered with High Point Elementary School students, teachers and a gardening expert to develop a garden that will have the diversity, stability, and resilience of natural ecosystems. The garden is located on the High Point Elementary School grounds at 5921 150th Ave. N. It covers about 1,700 square feet, but may be enlarged later.

The philosophy behind so-called “permaculture gardens” is one of working with, rather than against, nature. The word stems from two words - permanent and agriculture. In the case of the High Point garden, cardboard serves as the base layer; a mixture of manure, compost, hay and soil was then layered on top of the cardboard. The actual ground is not tilled as with conventional gardens.

Robert Segundo, a certified permaculture designer, has volunteered his time and expertise to oversee the project.

“Most children have no idea where their food comes from, and this is a great way for them to find out,” said Segundo. “These techniques put them on the road to sustainable farming techniques, using less water, no fertilizers or pesticides and reaping five times the food.”

Nancy McClelland, a High Point primary teacher, oversees the garden project that K-5 students recently have begun to tend.

“Our children spend the majority of their time inside classrooms and homes,” McClelland said. “Our garden is a long-range, sustainable project that engages students in hands-on, inquiry-driven activities which I believe boost core subject skills as well as nutrition. One of High Point’s goals is to promote parent and community involvement, and over the long run, that is what the garden will do.”

The project was initially envisioned by McClelland. She approached Jason Green, SPC’s Sustainability Coordinator, and they began discussing the idea of partnering to develop a student-run garden.

“Both the participating environmental club members and I are very excited to work with High Point Elementary School on this project,” said Green. “The idea of designing gardens based on healthy relationships among human development, microclimate, plants, animals, soil, and water just makes sense.”

The garden will produce a variety of vegetables, fruits, perennials and annuals, all grown in an ecologically responsible fashion.

“Whether planting, observing, measuring, weighing, journaling, or harvesting, children will become connected to the earth,” McClelland said. “This empowers them and gives them a sense of achievement and ownership.”
