New lending program starts in fall

The college soon will move to a system of direct lending in which students will be able to borrow tuition money directly from the federal government.

The system, Federal Direct Loans, will do away with the current complex and confusing system in which students have had to deal with many different lenders, guarantee agencies and service providers.

"The new system, in which the federal government is the direct lender, is simpler and much easier to understand," said Marcia McConnell, SPC's Director of Financial Assistance Services. "It provides a 'one-stop shopping' mode of lending that is much easier for everyone involved."

McConnell said the new system is simpler for students and their families, and easier for SPC to manage. SPC will have guaranteed access to loan capital under the new plan, while no longer having to maintain preferred lender requirements.

"Students and their families will have to deal with only one source of funding, and that will mean fewer complications when it comes to financing a student's education," McConnell said. "It offers a true, income-contingent loan repayment option with loan forgiveness after 25 years of repayment."

That forgiveness factor means that those who prefer to work in relatively low-paying, community service jobs can do so without fear of defaulting on their student loans, since remaining loan balances are forgiven after 25 years of payments. Under the old system, lenders could sell loans they held, and new loan holders didn't always honor the commitments of the original lenders. The federal government will never sell the educational loans they hold, so the loan terms won't change, and students and schools that participate in the Federal Direct Loan program won't be subjected to the marketing campaigns of lenders. The new system goes into effect in time for the Fall 2009 term.

Wellness Challenge: Do lifestyle habits make you look older?

Americans spend countless hours and money in pursuit of maintaining a youthful appearance. What works and can we control aging? A study of 200 sets of identical female twins helps answer that question. The study conducted by Dr. Bahman Guyuron was published in the February 2009 issue of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery, the official journal of the American Society of Plastic Surgeons. In this study, an independent panel judged the age of each twin.

Because identical twins have the same genetics, they should age the same way. If one twin looks 5 to 10 years older than the other, it may be because of one of the following lifestyle factors:

- Smoking cigarettes – The smoking twin was judged to be 2.5 years older than the non-smoking twin for each decade of smoking. Smoking accelerates wrinkles, especially around the mouth.
- Sun exposure – The twin with the most sun exposure looked older with more lines and wrinkles.
- Stress – The twin with more stressful life circumstances appeared to look older as judged by an independent panel that rated photos of all twins.
- Excessive alcohol can greatly accelerate the appearance of premature skin aging.

What to do?

- To control premature aging of skin and other negative health concerns, consider not smoking. Contact shears.cathleen@spcollege.edu or call at 727-341-3083 for information on how to quit.
- Use sunscreen daily (this is Florida) on your face and hands, limit your direct exposure to the sun at peak times, between noon and 3 p.m.
- Eat fruits and vegetables and other foods rich in antioxidants.
- Limit alcohol.
- Learn one stress-coping technique such as deep breathing and mindful relaxation.

The issue - Insect repellent

The larger issue

- Most conventional bug repellents contain 5-25% DEET, a pesticide that with prolonged and repeated exposure may cause rashes, headaches, impaired memory or muscle weakness.
- Mosquitoes can carry and transmit diseases and viruses like malaria, Encephalitis and West Nile virus.

Be part of the solution

Use organic and chemical-free herbal-based bug repellents for natural protection while outdoors. Before spraying yourself with inorganic chemicals, try these eco-friendly alternatives:

- Try a natural repellent. Frequently reapply basic essential oils like lavender, rosemary and cedar wood. These oils can trick insects into thinking you're a plant.
- Never use sun block at the same time as DEET. The sun block allows the DEET to enter the bloodstream three times faster, increasing the risk of stroke, headaches and hypertension.
- If you must use a DEET repellent, choose products with less than 20% DEET, never apply over cuts or wounds, never apply on infants, or use if you are taking any medications, don't spray in enclosed areas, and wash skin with soap and water after use.
- Dark clothing, exercising, floral and fruity fragrances and perspiration attract mosquitoes.
